Fantasy, Fiction Writers Symposium Scheduled

Fantasy and science fiction readers will come together at a symposium Wednesday through Saturday at Brigham Young University.

Fiction writers Orson Scott Card and Alan Dean Foster will address the symposium. Card's main address will be in the Varsity Theatre, Thursday at 11 a.m. Foster's main address is scheduled for Friday at the same time and place.

Card received his bachelor's degree from BYU. He is the recipient of the John W. Campbell Memorial Award for Best New Writer of the Year, and has been nominated for a Nebula Award. He is the author of many books, short stories, articles, and plays.

Foster has written the novelizations for many science fiction and fantasy movies, as well as many original novels.

Other lectures at the symposium include: Controversial Topics in Science Fiction, Science Fiction and Fantasy in the Utah Community, 1,000 Ideas in an Hour: Generating Ideas for a Story, and From Idea to Story: Structuring of Ideas.

The symposium is sponsored by Quark, the Science and Fiction club, BYU English Department, ASBYU Academics, the Leading Edge Magazine.
